

Here We Go Again
Propaganda note from the television industry: In houses where there is television, husbands spend 60 per cent more of their time at home. One of the outstanding successes of the American appliance business is the sales story it thinks up to tell the little woman.

Most intelligent action taken so far in the Berlin crisis where 40,000 Soviet-aided German youths are battling the Western powers with a "Unite Germany" rally was reported yesterday when one Western commander did something entirely unexpected.

Troops and tanks had been drawn up to keep the kids from invading the Anglo-American-French lines. But one commander had a happy idea. He let some of the young folks come in. They saw the Western style of living, with all the things that a generation of Communist rule has not only failed to produce for Russia but has forbidden to Eastern Germany simply because Russia has held it since the end of the war.

And having seen all this — the kids didn't want to go back home to Eastern Germany.

It's a nice story. Maybe it's only a propaganda stunt for our side — but it's believable.

It's believable — because, fundamentally, it's the same story that built up America. People were down-trodden, hungry, and afraid. They looked in on a strange new world, saw how free man can work and live — and having seen this they never went back to the lands they came from. The ideas on which it was founded and is still run today are enduring and sound. Perhaps we have trouble telling other folks about it in a way to make them believe. Then the sure way to convince 'em is to invite them in and show them.

Russia has already conceded her vulnerability to this graphic kind of argument. She is mortally afraid to let her own people or the people of her satellites come in contact with Western citizens, Western ideas, Western goods. She changes her commanders, her troops — and her satellites — almost from day to day, as fast as the slightest suspicion is aroused in that nervous area known as the Border.

So the kids rapped at the door and some astute gentleman said, "Come in and look around."

It never fails. . .

Bruces From Hope Mine Some Gold in California

While visiting in Southern California, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Bruce of 216 West 13th St. in Hope, panned real gold nuggets in the gold mine at Knott's Berry Farm and Ghost Town at Buena Park.

With the aid of a helpful old prospector, the Bruces finally extracted some actual gold from the mine but found that panning gold as the '40ers did is no easy task. The old prospector accompanied them on a trip through the real Ghost Town, an exact replica of a boom town in the Gold Rush Days of '49. Along creaky boardwalks, held down by the Bruces relived the colorful history of the old West when they discovered the Silver Dollar Store, General Merchandise Store and many other buildings, all on free exhibit, which are typical of the places where miners spent their hard-earned gold dust.

Borden Wins High Court Decision

Little Rock, May 29 (P)—The Borden Milk company of Texarkana, Tex., won the right to distribute its products in Hope, Ark., without paying an inspection fee.

This was the decision of the Arkansas Supreme court in reversing a Hempstead county chancery court prohibiting the company from doing business in Hope unless it complied with a certain city ordinance.

Litigation stemmed from controversy over ordinance No. 644, passed by the Hope city council, Sept. 6, 1949. That law prohibited the sale in hope of milk products pasteurized outside Hempstead county and not checked by the city milk inspector.

McClendon contended the company was already paying inspection fees at Texarkana and that duplication of these fees at Hope would force him out of business.

William McClendon, an agent of the Borden company, petitioned Hope city officials Sept. 7, 1949 for a permit to sell grade A milk in that city.

The petition was denied on ground that McClendon had not paid certain inspection fees as provided in the ordinance.

McClendon took the issue to chancery court, asking for an order directing the city to permit him to operate his business.

The court turned down his plea in holding that the ordinance was valid. The order also said the City of Hope had the authority to inspect the production of any milk offered for sale in Hope and that the city was entitled to collect tax of one and one-third cents per hundredweight to pay inspection costs.

The supreme court in holding that certain parts of the ordinance are valid, said:

"The Hope milk inspector's demand of payment of said fees as a prerequisite to the issuance of a permit is arbitrary, unreasonable and unauthorized under the circumstances presented here."

The court said that testimony in the lower court showed that:

The Borden Milk company plant is under supervision of the Texarkana city milk inspector and the Texas and Arkansas health departments. Public health service's standard law governing sale and distribution of milk.

The company, which has a superior rating in the processing and pasteurization of milk, pays about $300 in fees annually to Texarkana authorities for inspection of its plant.

Under terms of the Hope city ordinance McClendon would be required to pay about $2,500 in fees duplicating inspection services already performed by Texarkana authorities. "Such fees" would force him out of business.

The court, however, did rule that the Hope milk inspector can "reasonably satisfy himself that the health officer of Texarkana is enforcing the provisions of the standard ordinance without duplicating the inspection work of the Texarkana officer."

Auto Crashes Into Hearne's Gas Station

Robert Hamilton, Hope, narrowly escaped serious injury about 5 a.m. Sunday when the automobile which he was driving crashed into Hearne's Service Station at Third and Shover.

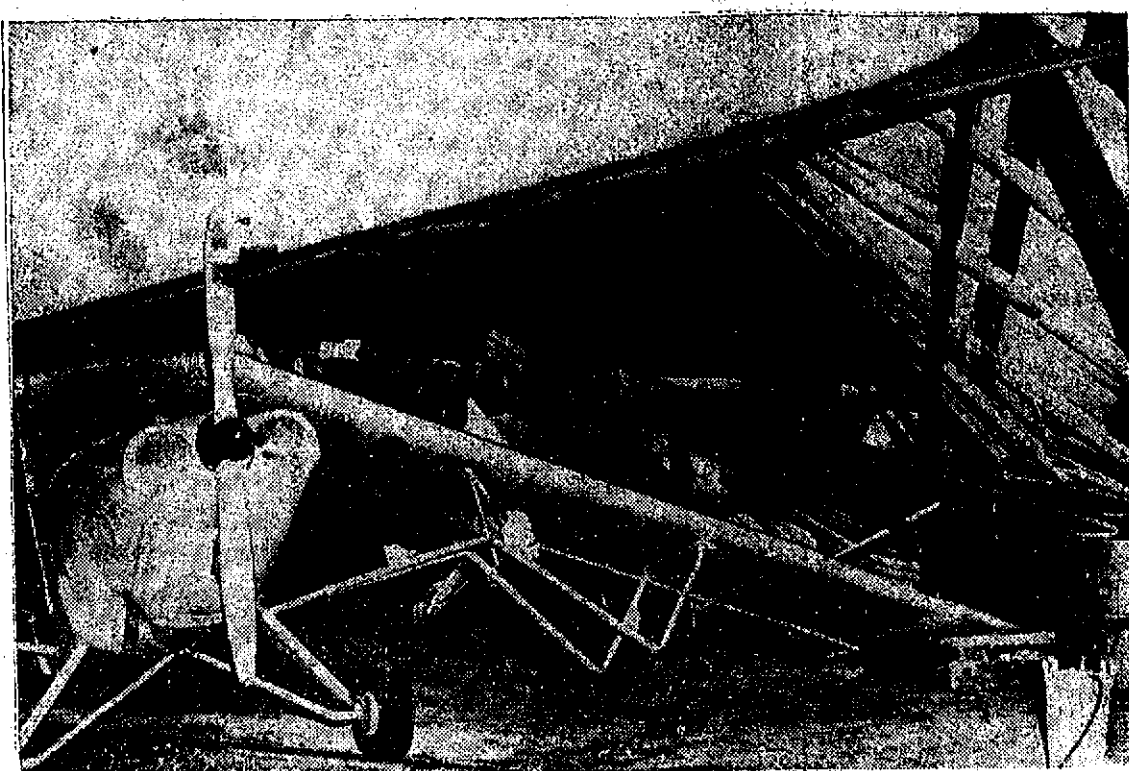

The service station was badly damaged and the automobile was practically demolished.

Hamilton was arrested on charges of drunk driving and driving a car without the owner's consent. The vehicle was owned by Ray Turner, local used car dealer.

Convicts Go on Trial for Murder

Pine Bluff, May 29 (P)—Two of the four convicts who killed a guard in a break at Tucker prison farm last Dec. 31, were to go on trial here today on a charge of murder.

They are James Perry Williams, 29, Sheridan, Ark., and David Dyer, 30, Oklahoma City. The other two, Odus Eaton, 25, Stillwater, Okla., and Jack Rheunark, 22, Sapulpa, Okla., are to be tried later.

They are charged with killing Bill Bohannon, trusty guard, when he refused to give up his keys.

Their escape touched off one of the state's most sensational manhunts, which ended during a sleet-storm in North Little Rock four days later. Eaton was the first captured. He was found walking near North Little Rock. Dyer was surprised trying to steal a car in North Little Rock.

Lid Clamped on Big Time Gambling

Chicago, May 29 — (UP)—Federal and local gambling investigations have clamped the lid on organized crime, underworld figures and police authorities agreed today.

Fear of a subpoena from a senate committee investigating "syndicate" operations has prompted the overlords of crime to issue orders curtailing operations until the heat cools off.

In many cases, the big chiefs themselves have picked up and left for obscure resorts or other places where they hope to hide out from the spotlight of publicity.

Ralph (Bottles) Capone, Jake Mazuz, Golf Bag Sammy Hunt and others on the Chicago crime scene aren't around these days. And authorities in other cities also report activities at the low ebb in years.

The mobsters, with good reason, shudder at the thought of a subpoena from the senate committee. But they generally feel that the investigations will not produce any lasting results.

Most hoodlums long ago realized it's bad business to tangle with the federal government. They know how to dodge local law, but they also know that a federal subpoena can reach out anywhere.

Should they be called before the committee, they face contempt charges if they refuse to testify, perjury if they lie and all kinds of trouble if they talk.

"Anyway you look at it, it's a losing deal," one underworld figure said.

In Chicago, the clean-up drive ordered by Mayor Martin H. Kennelly, plus the senate investigation, has brought a slump in syndicate operations. What gambling and unorganized variety — or administered by underworld lieutenants little known to police.

In This Day of Frozen Foods the Family Spends a Lot of Time Waiting for the Thaw

By HAL BOYLE

New York — (P)—Wilbur Peeble came home the other night and said briskly:

"Hello, Hon. When'll dinner be ready? I'm hungry as a grizzly bear."

His wife, Trilliss Mae, looked at him sternly and replied:

"Wilbur, you forgot something. You go right back out that door and come in again."

So Peeble went outside — and then he remembered. Annoyed, he came back in and gave his wife a kiss-peek on her ear, a custom he sometimes wished he hadn't started on their honeymoon 15 years before.

"That's better," said Trilliss Mae.

"I still want to know how long it'll be before dinner."

"Dinner will be ready as soon as I thaw it out — and heat it up again."

"What do you mean — thaw it? What are we having — icicles?"

"Steak, frozen peas and carrots, iceberg lettuce salad, and frozen strawberries for dessert."

"Frozen this, frozen that—what am I, a man or a refrigerator?" demanded Wilbur.

British Want to Study Coal Pooling Plan

London, May 29 — (AP) — Britain wants to take a long, hard look at the Schuman plan for pooling West, Europe's coal and steel industries, before committing herself to formal approval of the far-reaching project.

Informed sources said today Britain has rejected a French request that the Labor government go on record now as favoring the industrial pool in principle and examining the details later.

The sources emphasized that Britain's refusal does not necessarily mean she disapproves of the plan, which already has been hailed by West German leaders as a great step toward European unity.

But Britain first wants to examine the proposal in detail to see what sacrifices might be demanded of her if she joined British coal and steel output with that of France, Germany and other European countries.

French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman, who proposed the industrial pool early this month, has suggested that talks on the project be started in June by France, Britain, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg. Pending these discussions, the French asked that the countries

Missing Arkansas Girl Discovered in California

Los Angeles, May 29 (AP) — Ellis Ragliffe, Gentry, Ark., is expected here early this week to take charge of his daughter, Patsy Ruth, 12, who disappeared May 18 near Gravette, Ark.

She was picked up by police here Friday and is being held in juvenile hall pending arrival of her father.

Patsy Ruth ran away from home to see the sights of Hollywood because, she told police —

"There were only 29 people in the town, and all they did was raise chickens."

She told police yesterday that she hitchhiked out here in 10 days on a mere $5. She was picked up when a cafe owner reported to officers that the girl could not pay for her pie and root beer.

go on record as favoring the project in principle.

Britain has urged France and Germany to get the ball rolling with negotiations on pooling coal and steel output. But informed sources here said Britain flatly turned down the French request for former approval in principle now.

The sources said Britain already has expressed approval of the idea of Franco-German industrial union and of widening the plan to include other countries of Western Europe.

Air Passengers Terrorized by Gunman

Fresno, Calif., May 29 (AP) — John O'Reilly, 28, a meek gear grinder from Los Angeles, terrorized 25 persons with a cocked automatic high over California yesterday.

The air force veteran ranged the length of the Oakland bound airliner for half an hour waving his weapon.

Terrified passengers cringed. One woman fainted and fell to the plane's floor. He let her lie there.

His reign of terror ended when the plane made an emergency landing here. Deputy sheriffs carried him off to the county psychopathic ward.

His German war bride, Magdalene, 22, waited around and apologized to the passengers and plane crew after the incident.

The dramatic incident occurred on a flight from southern California to Oakland.

Half an hour out of Fresno, O'Reilly, an air force veteran, began acting strangely.

Stewardess Joan Herron and a passenger, Mrs. Dorothy McKenzie of San Francisco, pieced together the story after the harrowing half hour.

They said O'Reilly first complained that music on the plane's loud speaker was too loud. He refused coffee and sandwiches, saying they were drugged. Then he complained of gas odors and accused Miss Herron of trying to shut off the air when she put a blanket to block off a draft between the pilot's compartment and the passengers.

After locking himself in the lavatory for half an hour, O'Reilly came out, again complained of gas fumes, then smashed two windows with a fire extinguisher.

Miss Herron summoned the pilot, Joseph N. Nuccitelli. As Nuccitelli turned the controls over to the passenger compartment, O'Reilly pulled the automatic from his pocket.

Nuccitelli jumped back into the pilot's compartment, locked the door and radioed here asking police to be on hand when he made his emergency landing.

Meanwhile, O'Reilly waved the pistol at the passengers, shouting, "nobody's going to get me. I'll kill you all."

The LONESOME BRIDE

By Grace Nies Fletcher

"THE STORY: When Gloria Brown learns how to bake apple pie, she becomes a bride." — Chapter One by Grace Nies Fletcher.

XIII

GLORIA was still bolstering her courage with sophistry when her telephone rang again and Reuben's voice said breathlessly from the switchboard, "Tomorrow night at 8. Same place." He hung up before she could answer or ask any questions; probably someone was coming into the lobby.

"Tomorrow. Then I've got to get hold of the pie tonight somehow," Gloria figured. But this wasn't going to be easy with a cop sitting outside the door. The Benoni's fire escape window would be locked of course, but there was still the dumbwaiter door.

"It'd be burglary," she decided doubtfully. She hurried into the bathroom where she kept the luminal pills in the medicine cabinet that the doctor had given her to use that week when she hadn't been sure that Miltiades was going to ask her to marry him.

Five minutes later, clad alluringly in her green chiffon negligee, she opened her door with a cup in her hand. "I just made myself some coffee, officer. What is your name? I thought maybe you'd like one too."

"Murphy," he told her. "Very kind of you I'm sure, but we aren't supposed to take anything on duty."

"Well, I'll just leave it here in case you change your mind. I put it in two lumps and real cream," she beamed, setting the cup down beside him on the red carpet.

"I'll pour it into the aspidochron," he warned looking down the corridor at the plant.

Gloria merely smiled, left him, but when she looked back, breathlessly, through the crack of the door, he'd taken the cup into his hand, was sniffing it hungrily. She closed the door gently. She had put all three pills in the coffee so in about 20 minutes, there was a noise like a kitten purring. At about the third more, she tiptoed to the dumbwaiter, opened the door and looked down the shaft.

"It would be away down at the bottom," she worried as she pulled on the rope as carefully as she could, but it seemed to make a horrible racket coming up to her floor. What if someone saw her crawling across? Worse yet, what if she got on and someone decided to put out a garbage pail early, instead of waiting for tomorrow and hauled Gloria down to a lower floor? She could imagine the inquiry.

"How do you do, Mrs. Brown. Did you think you were debris?"

GLORIA giggled and felt a trifle less shaky. The first thing to do was to take out those two shelves. She tugged at them, trying not to remember how Jack the Cork had looked; all doubled up like a corkscrew with the red stain on the front of his coat. Ugh!

Just as she finished, put a small slipper foot experimentally on the dumbwaiter, a blast of laughter froze her to immobility as someone opened the dumbwaiter door on the floor below.

A man's slightly fuzzy, tender drifted upward and a girl laughed and said, "That's the wrong door. Give me the cocktail shaker before you drop it, darling."

What? That had been close. Gathering her trailing skirts about her, Gloria slid hastily into the dumbwaiter, pushed the little door beyond. If it was locked—it wasn't.

She slid to the kitchen floor with a great sigh of relief and closed the dumbwaiter door behind her. It was light enough in the room to see.

She was just stretching out her hand to take the pie when the light in the kitchen flashed on, and Gloria stared, horrified, at Hansen, the little janitor, standing in the dining room doorway watching her with hard gray eyes that did not smile at all.

"Oh. Good—good evening," Gloria stammered. "I—just dropped in to pick up my pie. Over there." When he did not answer, just glanced at the pie and then looked sternly back at her as if he didn't like this at all, and she'd better explain but fast, she added breathlessly, "The lieutenant told me you'd be looking after me still, Lieutenant McGann, I mean. What did he say your name was? Mr. Hansen? I didn't expect you'd be here."

"Yeah," he smiled. "So you were expecting me, huh? He took a step toward her snapping, "Or a necklace maybe?"

GLORIA caught her breath. Maybe they had been expecting her. Maybe it was just a police trap to find out how much she knew. As she stood there, wondering frantically what to say next besides a denial which he would not believe, she could feel his eyes going over her, taking her all in, her shining golden hair, her slim perfect body under the thin green chiffon, the arch of her small foot in its satin slipper and she smiled inwardly. Of course.

"I never even saw a real emerald in my life," she said. "I think you plainclothes detectives are so much more interesting than the men in uniforms!"

She slid her jade-green eyes under their long thick-lashed admiringly over his face from which the sternness was melting.

She murmured, "Do you like apple pie?" but her eyes said something else.

"How about you're having a piece of that pie together?" Hansen said. "I could use some chew. You're a cute little button, Toots."

DOROTHY DIX

Spoiling

Dear Miss Dix: What can a grandmother do who sees two fine and lovable grandchildren being utterly ruined in their rearing?

These children are never made to obey or to treat their parents or any one else with even common politeness. No restraints have ever been laid upon them. Are the young parents today too lazy to get themselves out a little to rear their children properly? I thank Heaven daily that I don't have to live in the house with these children, much as I love them.

A PERPLEXED GRANDMOTHER
Answer: There is nothing that you can do in the matter, because if the parents have not enough sense of responsibility to rear their children properly, no one can substitute for them or undo the harm that they have done. No one can interfere until the hard hand of the discipline and teaches them the obedience that their fathers and mothers should have inculcated in them in the cradle.

Unpardonable Sin
Whatever the reason that parents spoil children, they commit against them the unpardonable sin because they wreck their lives in the very beginning. It seems a cruel thing to say, but it is nothing less than the solemn, awful truth that almost every man and woman who fails in the world, almost every criminal, almost every unhappy man and woman is the result of some mother's spoiling.

The patterns of our lives are set before we are 3 years old. Our parents determine by the way they rear us just what sort of men and women we are going to make. And it is a cruel and a terrible thing they do to us when they doom us to go through life handicapped by faults that they should have corrected in our infancy.

Dear Dorothy Dix: I am a widower of 36. I have a little boy of 8 and have been advised by well-meaning friends that I should remarry for the sake of the boy as he is at an age when he especially needs a mother. I am hopelessly in love with a girl of 22. Do you think that the difference in our ages is too great for her happiness? I love her so unselfishly that I put her good before my own. There is a woman of my own age who I feel sure would marry me if I asked her, but the only reason I can see for marrying her would be that she would make a good mother for my boy.

S. O.S.
Answer: Whether fourteen years is too great a difference between the ages of a husband and wife depends altogether upon the temperament of the man and woman. If you are young for your age; if you enjoy going about and doing things, and if the girl is old for her age; if she is scold and serious-minded, then the matter of years is not to be considered.

But if you are old and settled in all of your habits, and if the girl is gay and high-spirited and pleasure-loving, then the difference between your ages is entirely too great.

Of course, in marrying, a widower should primarily consider his child's advantage, but because a woman is 36 does not necessarily insure her being a better stepmother than the one of 22. Is this child take to her, because children, like dogs, have a sure instinct about those who really love them? Will she be willing to stay at home and make a home for him instead of always gadding about? Watch how she handles the child and you can get a line on her qualifications for a step mother.

But, anyway don't marry the middle-aged woman whom you do not love under any conditions. That will make all three of you miserable.

Dear Miss Dix: My husband co-comes to the table every morning unwashed, uncombed and unshaven I have talked to him about it, but he does not seem to see that he is losing my respects and endangering the happiness of our marriage. When I look at him across the breakfast table I wish I was a thousand miles away.

NEAT WIFE
Answer: Men know how much importance they put upon their wives being easy on the eyes. It is strange that they do not realize that women, who put so much stress upon appearances, are even more offended by having to look upon a slovenly man.

But how you are to make your husband feel that you are worth dressing up for of a morning, I don't know. You might give him a dose of his own medicine and come to the table with your hair in curl papers and if he objects tell him that if he will doll up himself up for breakfast, you will, too.
